CONCEPT NOTE

In the words of Thomas Jefferson, “The study of the law is useful in a variety of points of view. It qualifies a man to be useful to himself, to his neighbours, and to the public.”

The function of law is the shaping of behaviour of the people in society and balancing the conflicting interests in society. There is inherent potentiality of change in every legal system. It grows with the growth of the people and expands according to experience.

The changing social and economic circumstances and the ever-increasing regulatory role being undertaken by the government have empowered people to express their perspectives on contemporary issues, thus producing a dialogue on developing matters.

The conference aims to cover a broad spectrum of topical issues and explore some of the social and economic contemporary controversies which surround law. It also aims at exploring the unexplored aspects of various areas of law from different perspectives as well as providing a forum for not only learning the legal rules governing a specific legal issue but also for debating the controversial policy questions engendered by that area of law.

The conference hopes that this intellectual approach will encompass a broad spectrum of law and socio-economic legal studies. It proposes to achieve a true synthesis of law and other disciplines and areas of learning.
